Jewish Novelist Held By South Africa In Riot Aftermath

A white novelist is among the hundreds of persons who were detained by the Government of South Africa in the aftermath of the Sharpeville riot of March 21. The demonstration, which brought a death toll of seventy-two Africans, was a protest against apartheid, South Africa's policy of racial segregation.

On April 22, Minister of Justice Francois C. Erasmus told Parliament that 1,575 persons had been arrested, including seventeen lawyers. The novelist, Harry Bloom, is a lawyer as well as a writer, says the New York Times. But Mr. Erasmus said at the time that as far as he knew, none of the lawyers was engaged in work connected with the emergency.

Private correspondence which was made available indicates that Mr. Bloom was in no way involved in the Sharpeville incident or its aftermath. Although Mr. Bloom is of strong liberal sympathies, he is not known to have belonged to a political party in sixteen years. But the correspondence indicates that he is held in Worcester jail, near Capetown, without having been told why.

At the same time, he has been informed that he may be held until March, 1961, unless the Minister of Justice orders his release. Under the emergency regulations, the prisoners need not be told why they are held. With Parliament adjourned until next January, it is possible that no action on their cases will be taken until then.

On the other hand, it was pointed out by the South African Information Service, any of those held may be brought to trial, or released at any time during the interval.

A letter from a person close to Mr. Bloom said that his arrest had come as a "complete surprise." The letter writer continued, "But we were unable to do anything about it as the emergency regulations specifically state that any act of protest against the manner in which the regulations are administered renders the person liable to arrest." Thus, reports the New York Times, the letter said, Mr. Bloom "has been denied legal representation, is not allowed to discuss his detention (even with his wife) nor is he allowed to take any steps to get himself charged (heard on formal charge) or released."

Mr. Bloom was born in Johannesburg on January 1, 1916. In 1956, his novel, "Episode", was published. It was about racial strife touched off by a trivial dispute between a white woman and her African laundress. Published in the U.S. as "Episode in the Transvaal," the book won the Anisfield-Wolf award for the year's most important work on racial relations. In England, it won the Author's Club award.

Mr. Bloom also wrote the book for "King Kong", the all-African

Chinese Foster Son Of Jewish Couple Is Bar Mitzvah

The ways of the twentieth century have led two boys, sons of an Austrian father and a Chinese mother, to a suburban home in Union, New Jersey, where they are being reared by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rothbloom with as much love and devotion as any parents could give their own children.

Harry and Charles Kolbar, aged thirteen and eleven, have been the foster children of the Rothblooms for eight years, writes John Molleson, in the New York Herald Tribune. They say they don't remember the days before they came to live in the two-story house at 1134 Caldwell Avenue, a shaded street whose gardens are now bright with roses.

There is no doubt that the boys are part of the Union community. On his thirteenth birthday, Harry was at the center of a proud congregation at Beth Shalom Temple on Vauxhall Road. In the midst of his friends and family he put on his talis (praying shawl) and yarmalke (cap) and opened the prayer book to chant the Hafterah at his Bar Mitzvah.

Harry was born in Shanghai and Charles in Vienna. The boys were in the custody of the Jewish Child Care Association, in Newark, when Mrs. Rose Rothbloom, now fifty-four, first saw them. It was a case of love at first sight, Mrs. Rothbloom said: "The minute I saw them I couldn't say no."

She had gone to the association because she and her husband, an upholsterer, found life empty and uneventful after their own three children were grown. Their eldest son, Edwin, was married and rearing his own family; his brother, was in the Army; and their daughter, Cindy, was away at school.

Cindy was the one who told her mother that the Child Care Association was anxious to find foster-parents for youngsters whose home life had been shattered by wars and revolution since 1939.

The suggestion that she take a foster-child fell on sympathetic ears, say the New York Herald Tribune. Mrs. Rothbloom, by her words and actions, seems to be a perfect mother, possessed of charm, capability, and common sense. She says she has kept her youth by rearing a second generation of children, which has been every bit as satisfying as the first.

Mrs. Rothbloom had not intended to take a Chinese child. But when she saw Harry and Charles, standing quiet and alone in a corner, she could not help feeling that these two lads were the ones who needed help the most. "The others might have more of a chance . . . ." she said, and she decided to bring Harry and Chuck home. They came with not much more than their toys. Chuck hugged a little bag of them, which he would not part with day or night.

In the beginning they didn't say much. "If you told them to put their things in a drawer, they didn't seem to know what a drawer was," Mr. Rothbloom said. "Now Charles talks a blue streak, he's

Rabbi Urges Reform Jews To Clarify Position On Israel

A leading New York rabbi proposed that a "declaration of principles" be written to clarify the relationship of Reform Judaism to the State of Israel. The proposal was voiced by the Rev. Dr. Bernard J. Bamberger in his presidential address at the recent seventy-first annual convention of the Central Conference of American Rabbis in the Sheraton-Cadillac Hotel, in Detroit, Mich., Dr. Bamberger is rabbi of Congregation Shaaray Tefila in New York.

Such a declaration has never before been attempted by the rabbinic body, says the New York Times. The speaker himself acknowledged that the undertaking was "perhaps beyond our powers." But he insisted that Reform Jews should at least "try to frame a statement that would clarify our own position and offer our people some direction."

Involved would be such questions as: Are Jews primarily members of a religious faith or are they mainly a racial group? Can Reform Judaism play a significant role in Israel where Orthodoxy is to all intents and purposes the state religion? What is the relationship of Reform Judaism to the Zionist movement?

In this connection Dr. Bamberger told his colleagues that "in many parts of the world liberal Jews are an embattled minority, lacking the status and recognition we enjoy here, subject to hostility, discrimination, and abuse." Judaism is divided into Orthodox, Reform and Conservative branches with a considerable common core of beliefs and practices. Orthodoxy, however, maintains the binding authority of Jewish religious law and insists upon its immutable character.

Conservatism also maintains the principle of the authority of Jewish law but recognizes that growth and development are an essential element of its nature. The Reform branch emphasizes the evolving character of Judaism and the continuous interpretation of religious law in accordance with the needs of modern Jewish life.

With Israel now a "vivid and vital reality," Dr. Bamberger noted that the Central Conference had never attempted to solve the theological, ethical and sociological questions that her existence had raised, says the New York Times. "We joined in the world-wide exultation over the establishment of the new state," he declared. "We adopted resolutions of support for the State of Israel in moments of crisis; and we decried the attempts of its foes — Jewish or Gentile — to harm it by false and malicious allegations.

Physician Was Noted As U.S. Expert On Football

Dr. Louis Henry Levy, a retired physician and author died of a heart attack in Mount Sinai Hospital, in New York. He was 77 years old and lived at 360 East Fifty-fifth Street. Fifteen years ago he was widely known under the name of Dr. L. H. Baker, whose "Football: Facts and Figures" was accepted as the definitive work on the sport.

A Yale man, he wrote more than a million words for a history of football at New Haven and the manuscript remains there as a monument to old gridiron heroes and to him, says the New York Times. Dr. Levy assumed the name of Baker around 1934, when he turned to the task of amassing football data as an antidote to financial losses and despair following the depression. He once explained that his paternal grandfather had changed the name from Baker, in Europe, to Levy in the United States.

At any rate, Dr. Levy, as Dr. Baker, collected 200,000 pictures, 30,000 books, 20,000 programs, 4,000 college catalogues, 150,000 newspaper clippings, and sundry information on 70,000 players, coaches, and officials — all of it cross-indexed for ready reference. The collection was broken up several years ago.

Although he had never played football or seen a game since 1926, Dr. Levy came to be acknowledged as the sure source of accurate detail on very nearly every aspect of the sport. "Football: Facts and Figures" was published by Farrar & Rinehart in 1945 with a foreword by Grantland Rice. "Do you Know Your Football?" followed a year later, introduced by John Kieran.

Dr. Levy was born in New Haven on April 2, 1883 (the year, he invariably pointed out, that Yale won eight straight games, scoring 482 points to the opposition's two). He entered Yale in 1901 and graduated with honors. He taught at Hillhouse High School while studying for a master's degree in chemistry, obtained in 1906, and finally was grad-

German Broadcast Of Grim Chapter On Eichmann, Also New Arrests, Sho[redacted] Change

Two of the principal West German radio networks broadcast long detailed accounts of the ghastly career of Adolf Eichmann, the former Nazi leader charged with complicity in the death of 6,000,000 Jews.

Klaus Happrecht, a prominent radio commentator, began one of the broadcasts on Eichmann and the Nazis' "liquidation bureaucracy" by stating that the German people would have to leave the prosecution of Eichmann to the state of Israel — where Eichmann is under arrest after being seized in Argentina in May, says the New York Herald Tribune. Nevertheless, Mr. Happrecht continued, "we must know who this man was and what he did."

Meanwhile, new arrests of former Nazis accused of war crimes are taking place in West Germany, one by one, almost every week. Although the statute of limitations for manslaughter is currently expiring, murder charges can still be lodged.

Prominent among those arrested recently is William Koppe, a former general in the Nazi S. S. (Elite Guard), who was taken into custody on a charge of having murdered 300,000 persons. The broadcasts and the renewed seizure of former Nazis indicate that the atmosphere surrounding the prosecution of war criminals in West Germany is gradually undergoing a remarkable change after years of hesitation and reluctance.

With at least 1,200 former Nazis currently under investigation, and many of them scheduled to stand trial during the coming months and years, there appears to be less open public resentment of the proceedings than at any time since the war. Until recently, it appeared that public opposition to the trials would increase rather than decrease as time went by. The argument was constantly heard that the Nazi era had become a thing of the past and that bygones be bygones.

However, contrary to expectations, there has in fact been an increase in willingness to deal with this grim chapter of German history, says the New York Herald Tribune. The turning point in the public's attitude seems to have occurred, with some delay, after the assumption of responsibility for war crimes prosecution by the West German authorities. This took place after the Western Allies ended their occupation and declared the Bonn Republic a sovereign nation five years ago.

It required another three years before Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's government and the West German state governments decided to establish a central bureau near Stuttgart to accumulate and co-ordinate legally valid evidence for the purpose of purging West German life of the worst unpunished war criminals still at large in the country.

With German thoroughness, the Stuttgart bureau assembled evidence pointing to the guilt of some 950 S. S. personnel and other persons who served at the large Auschwitz concentration camp in Poland, and implicating more than another 100 Nazis who were active at the Treblinka, Chelmo and Belzec camps, all also in Poland. Another 200 persons are under suspicion of murdering Jews and other victims in Estonia and Lithuania.

It has been the transfer of the prosecution from Allied to German hands that has given the proceedings a greater veracity and meaning to the public than was the case while war crimes were being dealt with by the Allies under military occupation law. The German appears to be more prepared to respect the verdict of German than of Allied courts in dealing with Nazi defendants.

Bitter grumbling about the trials continues in nationalist and neo-Nazi quarters. Part of the general public also regards the trials as an obeisance by the Adenauer government to "world Jewry." However, the continuing new arrests have the support of both of the country's largest political parties, the Christian Democrats and the Social Democrats, as well as of the nation's most influential

RABBI URGES

"We have listened to papers on the relation between Israel and the Diaspora (Jews in lands outside Israel) and we celebrated the tenth anniversary of Israel with great éclat.

"We have also voiced our concern over the denial of status to liberal Judaism and its spokesmen because of politico-ecclesiastical pressures; and our social justice reports have touched briefly on the plight of the Arab refugees. But we have not yet attempted to articulate a consistent philosophy on the relation between the national and religious aspects of Jewish life."

There is one crippling limitation to the Bonn Republic's current court proceedings, says the New York Herald Tribune. Under post-war West German law, the maximum sentence which can be awarded is life imprisonment. The death penalty is forbidden.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of a dear son and brother Jack Goldstein, who passed away July 19, 1940.

When evening shades are falling, and we sit in quiet alone,
To our hearts come a longing, if he only could come home.
Friends may think we have forgotten, when at times they see us smile,
But they little know the heartache our smiles hide all the while.

Ever remembered by mother, sisters, Rose and Belle; and brothers, Nathan and Saul.

Dr. Levy resolved to become a research specialist. He served four years as a pathologist at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York, then failed to receive the research appointment at Yale on which his heart was set. Disappointed, he turned to private practice in New Haven, where, he recalled, "I made an awful lot of money."

From the Nineteen Thirties until his retirement in 1950, Dr. Levy also practiced in New York, says the New York Times. For eight years thereafter he served with the American Red Cross mobile blood bank unit. Surviving are his widow, Lillian; two daughters, Mrs. Dorothy Jacobs, of Hewlett Harbor, L. I.; and Miss Felicia Baker, of Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.; a brother, Edward, of New Haven; a sister, Mrs. Ida Jacobson, of Brooklyn; and four grandchildren.

What We Want For Ourselves, We Want For All Humanity

Address to the Jewish Labor Committee, of New York, at its silver jubilee convention honouring the labor movement for its fight for human rights

BY GEORGE MEANY, PRESIDENT OF A.F.L.-C.I.O.

You in the Jewish Labor Committee and we in the AFL-CIO have far more in common than the word "labor" in our names. We have fought shoulder to shoulder on many issues and for many causes. But there is one of our common bonds, our common principles, that gives me a special sense of pride, as I am sure it does you. Although our enemies sometimes claim otherwise, neither of our organizations is a special interest group. What we want for ourselves, we want for all humanity.

In your case, you have fought valiantly to preserve and extend individual rights against all forms of bigotry and totalitarianism, not just Jewish rights, but the rights of every man. In our case, whether at the collective bargaining table or in the legislative halls, we fight for the economic and social progress of the people as a whole. We have said many times, and it is our deep conviction, that what is good for America is good for the labor movement.

You will concede, I think, that the problems of the labor movement are more diverse than yours. We must, by the nature of our movement, undertake so many campaigns, and wage our battles on so many fronts, that we find it difficult sometimes to give a single issue the concentrated attention it deserves, for fear of neglecting the others.

I know it sometimes seems to our friends that we move very slowly, indeed, on matters that are of deep, primary concern to them. Are we doing enough on the minimum wage law? Some of our own affiliated unions would say we ought to be doing more. Are we doing enough on the Forand bill? Not enough to satisfy everyone who is interested in medical care for the aged. What we are doing is the very best we can in the light of all the problems we face.

We find the same situation when we come to an even more fundamental issue, the issue of civil rights, of equal opportunity. It has been said by some, as you well know, that while the AFL-CIO supports civil rights legislation in Congress, we have not been vigorous enough in ridding our own movement of practices based on bigotry and discrimination. I want to make two points absolutely clear:

First, on this matter, as in so many others, I have nothing in common with the southern Senators. I do not propose to argue, a century after the Civil War, that discrimination will disappear if we just leave it alone. We haven't left it alone; we're not leaving it alone today; and we will never leave it alone until we wipe it out.

Second, while I do not pretend to enjoy criticism, I do not resent it when it is honest and factual, although sometimes I wish our friendly critics would keep in mind the ground we have already covered, as well as the distance we have yet to go. I think the record proves we have come a long way. Many of our older unions were born and grew up in an earlier and less enlightened period. They reflected the attitudes of their communities, prejudice based on ignorance. Discrimination was not only accepted; it was respectable.

It is a measure of our progress that where discrimination still survives in the labor movement, it is a bootleg product, sneaked in by subterfuge. Even those who practice discrimination know that its days are numbered. And we are going to make sure of it. I do not mention our progress with any feeling that we deserve praise for it. We do not deserve plaudits for doing what is obviously the right thing. On the contrary, I agree with those who are not satisfied, who believe the status quo is not good enough. I am not satisfied, either.

There are still some units within the AFL-CIO that engage in discriminatory practices. And there are others in our ranks, whose own records are clean, who think it is unwise for us to take a vigorous, public stand on civil rights. They argue that we have enough problems and enough enemies, without inviting more. They say that the civil rights issue is used to prevent union organization in the South, and to weaken the unions that exist in that part of the country. They say that some Southern Congressmen, who might otherwise be receptive to some parts of our legislative program, are alienated by our civil rights position.

I have heard all these arguments at first hand. They have not changed my convictions in the slightest degree. I say that if we have to practice discrimination to organize workers, then organizing will have to wait until we educate the unorganized. I say that if we have to lose a vote in Congress on minimum wages, or the Forand bill, or unemployment compensation because we take a stand on civil rights, that is a price we are prepared to pay.

The labor movement is a brotherhood, a brotherhood of workers. Surely, it cannot set its face against the brotherhood of man. I assure you that we will carry on the fight against bigotry in all its forms, wherever it is found. To me, this is not merely a fight to enforce the laws of man; it is a fight to fulfill the word of God. I will be satisfied with nothing but total victory. And I wish for the Jewish Labor Committee a future as long as I am sure it will be fruitful.

musical show that was a great success in South Africa last year. A British production of "King Kong" is scheduled to open in London in November. The backers hope a Broadway showing may follow.

Clement Alexandre, Mr. Bloom's editor at Doubleday & Co., said that Mr. Bloom's new novel "Whittaker's Wife," would probably appear in the fall of 1961, says the New York Times.

The correspondence indicated that the new work, set primarily in Rhodesia, did not treat of racial issues. The author finished it in his cell.

The Swastika Again

BY DAFNA ALLON, OF ISRAEL

In Israel the spontaneous reaction to the swastika flare-up was that of "Eli," the "little man" of the cartoons that appear in the Jerusalem Post and Haaretz, who was shown chalking up a Magen David with the words, Jews Come Home! This line was deprecated by Cabinet Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Abba Eban, who voiced the impeccable sentiment that "there would be no security for Israel and the entire Jewish nation if the safety of American Jewry was endangered."

The ordinary well-informed Israeli doesn't think that American Jews ought to consider themselves endangered; he simply wonders why any Jew anywhere should stick around and be insulted to his face if he can help it. At the same time old wounds have throbbed again in many an Israeli heart and mind, and there has been a vague, unfocused feeling, "We ought to do something about it."

The Israel Government's note to foreign governments was accepted as natural and right, if not likely to have any very striking effect. There was little realization that it was in fact a decisive step in policy, and one taken not without misgivings — the first formal and official declaration by the Government to the world at large that the fate of Jews everywhere is the concern of the State of Israel.

Why did this epidemic of anti-Semitic gesturing start just now, and having started, why did it spread like a bush fire? The latter question is easier to answer than the first. The Scotland Yard man in London was right when he said, "These things go in waves." Toutes proportions gardées, mutatis mutandis, and l'havdil, it is one of those things like the hulahoop craze or the Brigitte Bardot hair-do which can sweep the inhabited globe in a matter of days or weeks. What the jargon-mongers call modern mass communication media did their work on modern receptivity. But what set the chain reaction off?

There has been much talk of a neo-Nazi international underground, and supporting evidence has slowly accumulated. How else indeed explain the use of German words everywhere? There have also been suggestions of provocation, and the idea cannot simply be written off. It should not be forgotten that Nazis and Communists cooperated in the 1920's to bring down the German Social Democracy of Weimar, so that there is nothing inherently unlikely in their trying to do the same for the German Christian Democracy of Bonn.

On the contrary, the query, Cui bono? points straight to the East German Communists. Or was it simply triggered by the fuss made over the inauguration of the Cologne Synagogue plus the arrival of Christmas? Either way, the postal pamphlet peats from Sweden and elsewhere got to work, while it is clear that a great deal was also pure private initiative, so to speak, on the part of what the London Times called "the baser sort."

Why was it so easy to get the thing going? Jew-hatred, the Great Hatred, was not consumed together with its victims in the fire of the furnaces. It is not born and does not die, it is always with us and everywhere essentially the same, however its manifestations change. The UN Human Rights Commission has asked UN member States to report on the "underlying causes and motivation" of the recent incidents.

Do we wake or dream? Are we at Evian or Bermuda? As if the disease had not been diagnosed and described in all its forms and phases, its causes analyzed and classified, as if the other side of the coin, the Jewish Problem, were not the subject of libraries-full of books! The Scotland Yard man was right again when he said, "It's a way of letting off steam" — in other words, (for the benefit of those unfamiliar with the expression) a way of discharging imperfectly suppressed aggressive impulses.

In England on Guy Fawkes Day, 1959, the traditional foolery with fireworks was the occasion of nationwide hooliganism and destruction of property, all without international provocateurs or previous publicity over television. In the first heavy fog of the winter, youngsters started rough-housing passers-by in the streets, probably in the belief that the fog hid them from their victims and from the police, but certainly also in the relief from inhibitions bestowed by the dreamlike setting of a really good London fog.

There is no end to the evidence of the aggressive impulses seeking an outlet in modern society, from vandalism in the Christian cemetery in Jerusalem's Greek Colony to teen-age gang warfare on New York's East Side, the Notting Hill race riots in London, and American Air Force/Army rivalry in missile projects. The new anti-Semitism has not taken an openly violent form, no one has been beaten up or spat upon in public, not even in Germany, where after all the years of indoctrination you can no more easily persuade the average German that a Jew is an ordinary human being just like himself (is he?) than you can rub out color prejudice from the web and woof of the white South African's mind. But even without physical violence, all this hatred floating around loose in the world is sufficiently dangerous.

Why aggressiveness has no sufficient healthy outlet in modern life, why there is so much inner fear and insecurity with its concomitant exteriorization, hatred, are themes for the educationalists, psychologists, sociologists, political philosophers — and the theologians, if there still are any. "Original sin" is as good an answer (and one well-rooted in Judaic teaching) as "the dissolution of the traditional family and social framework," the need for women to work in industry, women's dislike of washing-up (vide D. H. Lawrence, men must work and women as well), urbanization (magic word), or the atom bomb.

There is of course nothing new in seeing anti-Semitism as an outlet for the aggressivity of frustrated individuals, groups and classes, notably the petite bourgeoisie. What is new is that poverty is now no longer a major cause of collective frustration. Growing mass prosperity has everywhere gone hand in hand with more delinquency and drug-taking among juveniles and more crimes of violence in general.

"Everywhere" here includes the "Socialist sixth of the world's surface" too. Whatever the cause of the frustration, the old question recurs, "Why pick on us?" Now every schoolboy who has read his Ber Borochov knows that Jews are visible and vulnerable because of their "abnormal" occupational distribution — too many fiddlers, garment salesmen, high court judges, theater critics and atomic scientists, and too few street-cleaners, farmers, coal miners, and steel executives.

We are all agreed that the Jews are the salt of the earth but, as Chaim Weizmann said, "When the soup is too salty it is poured out." Our schoolboy knows that the Jews can only be redistributed "normally" in a Jewish society, and that this can only be constructed in the Land of Israel, as Borochov concluded on the strictly scientific, dialectical ground that they hadn't the ghost of a claim to any place else.

But all the dialectics can't explain the fantastic disproportion between the population ratio of German Jews in 1933 (and in 1960!) and the amount of noise made about them, between the Jewish problem generally and the trouble it has caused. There was once a belief that the Jews are the bearers of a mission and a message. In the days when it was a great matter for debate whether the Jews were a nation or not, Dostoievsky, who liked them not, said that their belief in their mission sufficiently constituted their nationhood — that and that alone.

The Jews themselves have mostly been unwilling bearers, only asking to be allowed to lay down their burden, to be left alone. Only recently when Ben-Gurion made a pronouncement on Israel's destiny to be "a light to the Gentiles," an indignant citizen wrote a finely-turned letter to the papers reproaching him for his arrogance. It would be surprising if this mission and this message were indeed the seed of so much hatred, for little enough heed has been paid to the message over the millenia.

Perhaps Freud came closest when he said that in the common subconscious heritage of mankind the Jew represents . . . But every article has to end somewhere. The short answer is that where the Jew is, there you will have anti-Semitism, and Jews are — or have been — everywhere.

This article is from the Jewish Frontier.

CHINESE FOSTER SON

going to be a senator, or a lawyer," she said. "Harry does a lot of reading. Two years ago it was dinosaurs he read about. He could spell all of them, even tyrannosaurus. Now it's outer space he's interested in.'

Both lads have fine, intelligent faces, and they talk extremely well and very politely. "We are delighted that you came to our house," Charles said. They call their foster-parents Mummy and Dad, and they mean it. "My mother's daughter is getting married," one of them announced proudly at school when Cindy became Mrs. Saul Cohen. They seem to have a good sense of fun, and enjoy sports, television, and planting flowers.

Their shouts and laughter ring through the house, making a joyful noise for Mrs. Rothbloom. "They have never been spanked," she said, "and that's more than I can say for my other children." Her main hope is that she and Mr. Rothbloom will live long enough to see them through school and college, and settled in life, says the New York Herald Tribune. "Even after that, as long as we have breath, they'll have a home," she said.

Bidding the reporter farewell on the porch of the house, Charles pointed to a low-hanging branch and said there was a nest on it. The day before he had found that a baby bird had fallen on the ground. He placed it back in the nest with great care. "If I hadn't put it with its right mother, it might have died," he said. Obviously, his eye is on the sparrow on Caldwell Avenue.
